IRONTON. - MISSOURI

A Tale of Love and Adventure in the Late Civil War.

BY BERNARD BIGSBY, AUTHOR OF "ELLEN'S SECRET," "FALLEN AMONG THIEVES" "MY LADY FANTAS-TICAL," AND OTHER STORIES.

[Copyrighted, 1888, by the A. N. Kellogg Newspaper Company.] CHAPTER XIII

THAT NIGHT AT RICHMOND. It was the 27th day of February, 1865. The army had wintered close to Winchester, and the campaign was about to open with a grand review before General Sheridan. It was a splendid sight, that you would go many a mile to see in these piping times of peace; but there were no on-lookers, the blinds of neighboring houses were all drawn down, and not a curious face peeped fartively out, nor came a soul from Winchester to witness the gallant doings. Think of it! Fourteen thousand cavalry, endless lines of infantry, and fifty batteries of artillery, all in their best, with the spring sun shining on their ranks.

It was a long ride for Sheridan that day to pass before the extended ranks. On starting he was accompanied by his staff, brave in furbished uniforms, but by degrees, as horse after horse succumbed to fatigue, there was nothing left of the gay cavalcade but the General himself on his tireless black charger. And the most singular part of it all was, that when the long ride was over, every soldier in line was ready to swear that Sheridan's eyes looked straight into his with especially approving

Two days afterward, at four o'clock in the morning, this splendid host set forth to fulfill its destiny. They captured Staunton, passed Waynesboro, and marched along the muddy roads to Charlottesville. Little did Harry think, when he went a soldiering, that high academic honors would be conferred upon him; that, in fact, he would be appointed temporary conservator of the third greatest university of this troops approached the city eager deputations of burghers and college authorities came forward to pray the clemency of the country, but so it was. As the Union invaders, and to Winthrop's guardian care was confided the protection of those classic halls which have made Virginia illustrious as a home of learning. But I am afraid these roystering troopers enjoyed the good fare the rich city provided a great deal more than the honor accruing from their protectorate of college dons.

Then they struck the James river and destroyed every lock and mill they came to, reaching Hanover Junction, where they had a brush with Pickett's division, which Harry Winthrop declares to this day was the best in the Confederate army, and finally joined Grant at Petersburg. Meanwhile Lee's position was becoming utterly desperate, for every day Grant's grip upon him was tightening with the cruelty of an avenging Nemesis, and the only hope left to him was to steal away and join Johnston.

On the 1st day of April Sheridan, with nine thousand sabers and heavy columns of infantry, drove his force like a wedge behind the Confederate position at Five Forks, twelve miles southwest of Petersburg; and, assailed in front and rear, the garrison was overwhelmed, and five thousand men were taken prisoners.

The next morning at four o'clock the Union army advanced along the whole front, and the Confederate line of intrenchments was broken and thousands of prisoners were captured.

Oh, that sad, sad Sunday at Richmond! The churches were full of people pitifully praying for Divine interference to avert the calamity they trembled to think was beyond the power of human aid. Even as Jefferson Davis sat in his pew, the bitter tidings were brought him, and men read in his pallid face the beginning of the end of their heroic struggie. From lips to lips were passed the fatal words-Richmond must fall. Then the streets were filled with men, women and children, rushing in wild lamentation they knew not whither, while even in that supreme hour of misery the figures of busy plunderers might be seen doing their unholy work regardless of the suffering around them. In vain the city fathers tore from the warehouses the whisky barrels and poured their contents into the gutters, men were found even in that dread hour reeling like demons through the streets, and when night came and General Ewell fired the great tobacco houses, and the flames leaped with uncontrollable fury from street to street, the crisis of wretchedness was reached by the terror-stricken inhabitants. That night Petersburg and Richmond were evacuated, and Lee, having done all that man could do, passed with the wreck of that splendid array with which he had struck the Union forces so many a crushing blow out into the open country, with the relentless Sheridan hanging on his flanks. In all history where is there a parallel of the heroic sufferings of Lee's fugitive host? Beset on all sides by a relentless foe, ragged and spirit-broken, driven by the pangs of hunger to eat the young shoots of trees, with the clatter of the pursuing cavalry in their ears if for a moment they lingered for rest, they wandered on in grim despair. And when the last supreme moment was come and the long ranks of the Union army bristled in their front, they rallied to their gallant leader's order to form for the

But Grant's letter to Lee, demanding surrender and offering terms of generous treatment, averted what would have been one of the bloodiest tragedies of the warthe slaughter of men who, right or wrong, had fought like heroes.

So, on the 9th day of April, 1865, the Army of Virginia laid down its arms, and the men who had periled so much for a sentiment, were no longer Confederate soldiers,

"WHY, SURELY THIS IS WALTER PROBISHAM!" but simply citizens, and Northerner and Southerner fraternized and conversed in words of sympathy and respect.

"Why, surely this is Walter Fro-bisham!" Harry cried, grasping the hand of a pale, emaciated young fellow, who stood disconsolately leaning against a fence, and whom he at once recognized as the hero of the Jackson dispatch episode. "And you are Harry Winthrop!" was the cordial response. "Ah, this is a glorious surprise, for we all thought you were

"You thought me dead?"

said, I think that you had fallen in a raid with some of Moseby's men, and that, though he had performed prodigies of valor in your behalf, life was extinct when he reached your side."

"What object could he have in concocting such a tale as that?" Harry asked, in "Oh, I suppose he wanted to get on the blind side of Kate, for whom he has always evinced a sneaking kindness," was the careless reply. "And Kate? You have not yet told me how she is faring." "Indifferently well, I believe. I haven't ing in Richmond; but you can imagine they

Harry thought of the horrors of the last few days, and sighed to think of what she must have endured. "So they are hving now at Richmond," he

are not having a very lively time of it."

continued. "They are. You will find them at an old mansion a little way back of the capitol, for I suppose now this little unpleasantness is over, you will be looking our people "And does she see much of this Alphonse Lecroix?" Winthrop asked, ignoring the youth's question.

"That she does, for he has been the osom friend of the family for four years. In fact, I believe he is staying with our folks now and will go into business with my father as soon as we have turned our swords into plow-shares. I never liked the fellow, but I must say it is rather generous in him to find the capital to start a crippled and impecunious man on the way to fortune again.

"And Kate? What does she say to all this?" Harry asked, breathlessly. "I suppose she is properly grateful," was the reply. "And I rather think father and mother hoped that now you were under the sod, as they believed, there would be a chance to recognize him as a son-in-law!" "The infamous scoundrel!"

"Eh! why, I always imagined to hear him talk that you and he were as thick as twin brothers. You don't mean to say-" But Winthrop interrupted him with a torrent of explanations. He told all he knew about Lecroix's antecedents, and pictured in indignant terms the utterances of his abominable treachery, especially alluding to his fabricated account of Kate's imaginary death-wound.

"Well," was the cool reply of the young man, when Harry had exhausted the category of the Canadian's crimes, "I must say you astonish me, and personally I should be glad to see him exposed and punished; but you see, Winthrop, in the present state of affairs you would find it difficult to induce my people to take a very severe view of any little trick done an enemy in war-time, intrenched, too, as he is, so securely in the affection of the family. Besides, he would contradict you point blank, and, as there is only your evidence against him, I fear the influence of the court would be all on the other side."

"If by 'the influence of the court' you mean your father's favor," Winthrop said, haughtily, "I shall not make any effort to ameliorate his judgment. All I ask is that vou will make known to your sister the facts I have laid before you, so that she may be in a position to draw her own conclusions as to the character of the man who assumes such an interest in the household. She, at least, I think, will give credit to my statements."

"That I am sure she will." Frobisham said, heartily; then added with a little burst of enthusiasm: "Upon my soul, Winthrop, you are a fine fellow, and I wish things could have happened differently, for of course your marriage with Kate is now impossible.

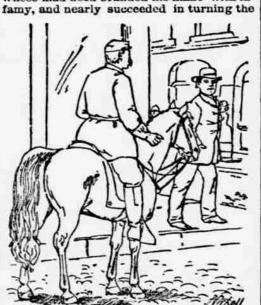

" And why?" "You ask why? Little you know Kate Frobisham if you think she would ever forget the horrors of the past four years or the share you have had in the misery she has endured." "I will take my chance of that, Frobisham, for, mark my words, the time is not far off when, bitter as you feel at this moment, the wounds of this cruel war will be healed, and welded again into one grand Union, there will be no North and no South, but one great, glorious people rejoicing in the strength of its unity," Harry said, earnestly. "Yes," was the bitter reply, "when the millennium comes, and the lion lies down with the lamb."

CHAPTER XIV. A GREAT CRIME.

And five days afterwards news was flashed through the country that Abraham Lincoln was assassinated by a crazy actor, whose mad deed branded his name with in-

YOU DON'T LET THE GRASS GROW UNDER YOUR FEET, WALTER."

generous tide of compassion for the suffering South into a torrent of vengeful rage, which would have overwhelmed thousands

Harry Winthrop and his troopers were sent in hot haste to scour the purlieus of Richmond, for the murderer had fled, and it was at first thought he had taken refuge with sympathizers in the ex-capital of the Confederacy. It was a police duty, for which neither men nor officers had a fancy, but it had to be done. He was sitting one day at his quarters examining an array of papers which had been just handed to him for inspection by one of his Lieutenants. The documents were proscriptions of persons suspected of harboring Booth, and were under the especial charge of the young officer. Harry glanced through them with a listless air. when suddenly one arrested his attention. "Ah, Garston," he said, eagerly. "What loes this mean?" As he spoke he handed his subaltern a nemorandum he had taken from the pile of papers, marked: "Lionel Frobisham. served in Moseby's irregulars; Walter Frobisham, Lieutenant in Confederate cavalry, son of above; Kate Frobisham, daughter of Lionel. All reside at 1 North Cres-

"Why, sir, I have not yet had time to inquire into the particulars of it, save so far as the evidence of the informer goes, but, if he is to be relied on, these Frobishams seem

"Who was the informer." "A fellow who came into the provost marshal's office while I was there-quite a decent sort of chap, well-dressed and gentlemanly in appearance, but exceedingly flushed and excited."

"He gave his name, of course?" Yes, I have it here, for I took the pre-caution of making him sign the notes I had "Yes, I have it here, for I took the taken of his revelations. Here it is, sir; and there's the fellow's autograph in full-Alphonse Lecroix." Harry was too dumfounded to speak. He took the paper from the Lieutenant's hand, and read it through in silence. It was a wild, rambling charge of treaso against the persons implicated, declaring that of his own personal knowledge the Frobishams, and especially the girl Kate, "Indeed we did. Your friend, Lecroix, had been in communication with Booth for brought the news to our place last fall. He many weeks, and that he could prove that they were the very center of a conspiracy to destroy the Government. Nay, he even confessed that he had taken part in their malicious designs, though, of course, only with the intention of frustrating them.

"Have you conferred with any one concerning this matter!" Harry asked. "No, sir. I am just fresh from the interview, and was about to consult you.' "Then keep your own counsel and say nothing to any one. I will myself take charge of this case," Harry said, as he dismissed his subordinate. He was sorely perplexed. Of course he knew that the charge of the treacherous been home much since they have been liv- scoundrel was false, but in these excited times the veriest whisper of suspicion, no matter from what source, might entail endless misery on the innocent victims. Al-

> And why had the villain so suddenly turned to rend the Frobishams. Pondering over these matters, he called his orderly and started at once for the Frobishams. Hardly had he gone a couple of blocks than he saw Walter Frobisham hurrying along the sidewalk; so, reining in his horse, phonse Lecroix must be crushed once and

"You don't let the grass grow under your feet, Walter," he said, reprovingly. "Why, I believe you were going to pass without recognizing me." "Forgive me, Harry," was the response, "but I am in trouble. To tell you the truth, I am hunting all over the city after Al-

he beckoned the young man to his side.

Ah! Could it be possible that there was something in the Frenchman's incoherent accusations after all? The young man's manner was certainly very suspicious.

"Yes, I may as well make a clean breast of it. We have had the devil to pay at our house; for, when I carried Kate the news of my interview with you and your strange revelations, she set the old folks at defiance and cut Lecroix dead." "Brave girl!"

"Yes, I dare say she is; but not very politic. Her treatment drove the Prenchman to distraction, for he is a man of strong passions, and, what with whisky and what

HIS HAND CLUTCHING HER THROAT, STOOD meet. ALPHONSE LECROIX.

than a raving lunatic. Why, this morning while I was away from home he terrified Kate half out of her wits by swearing that his love was turned to hate, and that he would be avenged on her. I am positively alarmed for her safety, and if I can only come across him I mean to stick to him till the delirium of bad whisky and evil passions is out of him."

come across him I will have him in frons before he can say Jack Robinson. By the bye, I was just going to see your father." "Oh, I'm glad of that. The house is on the right, at the top of the hill-big, old tumble-down place-was a boarding-house, but the rats and mice and Frobishams have it all to themselves now.' Harry had no difficulty in finding the house, a dingy mansion which had evidently seen better days, but which now with blindless and shattered windows and battered walls, looked indeed a cheerless abode. Dismounting and throwing the bridle of his horse to his orderly, he climbed the stone steps and knocked at the door. There was no answer. Again and again he repeated the blows till he could hear their echoes reverberating through the dismal rooms, and was about to retire with the bitter feeling that some member of the family had seen him-perhaps Kate herself-and refused to grant him admission, when he thought he heard a cry-yes, he was sure of it-a woman's voice calling for help. Without pausing to listen twice, he flung himself with fury on the door, and to his joy the rusted iron lock gave way, so, calling to the orderly to tie up his horses and follow him, he dashed into the interior of the house. The lower rooms were silent, but from the second or third floor came the sound of scuffling and angry voices. "Help, help! For the love of Heaven, help!" reached him in tones that gave wings to his feet.

He was just in time. Over the prostrate form of Kate Frobisham, his eyes rolling in frenzy, his hand clutching her white throat, stood Alphonse Lecroix.

With a bound Harry fell upon him and dashed him to the floor, where for a moment he lay panting and glaring like some wild animal; then, with the strength of madness, he flung Winthrop from him, and hurling aside the orderly who had now come to his officer's aid, crashed through the casement of the window and fell with a dull crash upon the pavement fifty feet below.

"Oh, Harry, Harry!" Kate sobbed, as she threw her white arms around his neck and hung quivering to him. He pushed back the long black hair from her brow and kissed her upraised face. "You are safe, my sweet!" he cried, exultingly. "Thank God, I came in time!" gently from his embrace; "yes, you must go." Then, as though waking from a dream, she cried: "How could I be so thoughtless! Quick! Harry, to the aid of my father and mother! They are somewhere in the lower harm they may have suffered. Oh! do not delay one moment, but speed to their as-

Harry hurried away at her bidding. For a time he could not find a trace of any other inmate of the house, but at last heard voices behind a door at the end of a long passage, at the extreme rear of the building Without ceremony, Harry opened the door, and found himself in a small apartment face to face with an elderly lady and gentleman, who, all unconscious of the tragedy, were engaged in reading and destroying old letters, a pile of which lay on the table beside them. Though he had never seen Kate's parents, he knew that he was in their presence. The crutches by the man's chair and the bandaged stumps of legs identified him, while the shell-like complexion and delicate features of the lady brought to his mind the descriptions his mother had so often given him of Mrs.

Frobisham. "Well, sir," said the gentleman, flushing angrily, "this is a strange way of intruding into an apartment of a private house; but perhaps I am wrong in supposing that the privacy of a home remains to us any longer."
"Oh," Harry exclaimed, "is it possible that you have been undisturbed by the com motion in your house, or are you indifferent to your daughter's peril?"

"My daughter's peril!" the mother cried, springing to her feet. "Ah, we heard noises, but thought they came from the street. Where is my daughter! Quick, sir, speak!" "Saved, mother, saved!" cried Kate her self, as she glided by Harry and flung her self in Mrs. Frobisham's arms. "What in the name of heaven does this melodramatic nonsense mean!" the father cried, flushed with anger. "Where is Le-croix? Where is Walter? Is there nome with a grain of sense to tell me what her an airy, intangible, invisible theory.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

YOUNG AMERICANS. Why They Should Assiduously Study the Principles of Government.

This is blunt speech. For there are tens of thousands of citizens who have what the Government is, and about ter. what it ought to be. The "average American" is, to be sure, an indefinite sort of person, and he is apt to think and know more about public affairs than he shows. But there is one class of Americans to which he does not belong-Americans who, unfortunately, to the Paris Exposition of 1889, while do take a "practical view" of things. in Europe on a special mission, having They know the Blue Book better than for its object a search for documents they know the Constitution; they look and other evidences relating to the collection of offices; they know the Paris, among the archives of the salary attached to every office, and Ministry of Foreign Affairs, a paper their highest and only ambition, as written by Talleyrand which has parcitizens, is to secure the best-paying | ticular interest at this time in connecoffices for themselves. The American, tion with the project now under way with his "theory" and imperfect knowl- and in charge of a committee of ladies. edge, is so far ahead of this type of presided over by Miss Bayard and Mrs. out of all question.

dream; the duty he owes to the com- the original of which is Nos. 172 and monwealth, to society and to himself, he can not, with honor or safety ignore. The true grandeur of our Government depends upon the justice of its laws; Republic): those laws depend upon the virtue, the patriotism and the wisdom of the people. The fight for independence did not end with the treaty of peace; nor did the adoption of the Constitution settle forever all questions of civil liberty and government. Dangers have appeared in the past; dangers menace power. The regrets caused by the death of us to-day; dangers will yet arise. They may come from the direction of the Government, or they may come from society, as evils for the Government to

The subject of government is a profound and momentous one, yet it is not It would be an error for parents or teachers to withhold it from you as a consciousness of its gravity; you can "Well, don't let me detain you, then. If I not take too broad a view of National destiny and of your rights and duties as younger citizens; you can not study these things too soon. You are not expected to plunge at once into the depths of "political science;" you need not vex your early wits over abstruse "economic" puzzles. With time and experience will come ability to handle disputed problems, and to follow the drift of National policy and power. At the start, the mask of mystery should be lifted off; the reality of government should stand before your thoughts .- Edmund Alton, in St. Nicholas.

PIOUS TELEGRAPHERS.

Night Operators Conduct Sunday-School Service by Wire. The latest fad, and one much more ikely to be productive of good than the majority of these outgrowths of our rapid civilization, has recently developed among the night operators on the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis railroad, between Nashville & Chattanooga, and a widespread popularity for it would be the means of much good. They have organized a Sundayschool, which meets, or rather assembles, at different points along the wire every Sabbath morning at two o'clock. This novel association is opened with prayer by the superintendent, J. B. Blamblet, night operator at Martrace, Tenn., followed by the reading of a Scripture lesson and the regular international Sunday-school lesson. Classes are organized and the pupil with the quickest mind and nimblest fingers captures the circuit, and his generosity will have to be relied upon to prevent a corner on answers and give all a fair showing. Of course singing is impossible. No amen corner can be established; and no flirting with the pretty "But you must go," she moaned, drawing | girls in the choir will ever break up the organization and throw the different communities into uproars. No jealousies of organist and chief singer; only the soft clicking of the machines part of the house, and I know not what and the murmur of the wires in the clear night air, carrying the message which was first chanted by angels on another starry night nineteen centuries gone by. The first regular session after the organization was completed was on last Sabbath morning. The theme was the cleansing of the leper, the old pathetic story of his faith and healing, as told by Saint Mark in the first chapter of his epistle. Reverent fingers sent the words over the magic wires: ments the harp shows to advantage "If Thou wilst Thou canst make me clean." Then from another sleeping town came the murmur as if in answer to the prayer of each soul so mysteriously in communication with other souls by this God-given mystery of electricity: "I will; be thou clean." Some one along the line thinking more fifteen and twenty cents, - "and forth- fourth sounds that will ravish the ears boys of the wires who, through the and at all private entertainments to and have greatly desired to paint some

ning religious services after the old fashion-Sunday-school at 9:30 a. m. -we read: "All along the line there To say that he comprehends the Fed- | will be Sunday-school services, begineral power in all its immensity, in all ning promptly at 2 a. m. and continuits ramifications, in all its far-reaching | ing one hour." The only trouble we effects, is to pay him a compliment at can foresee growing out of this new the expense of fact. To know the re- departure in electric science is that died several years ago at Sitka. A ality, to know how far it is actually some politicians may object on the working out the purpose for which it ground of union of church and State. the north transept, at ten o'clock in was established, and how far it has For instance, in the heat of campaign swerved from its true course, he must some patriot, intent on saving his counknow more than constitutional prin- try, should choose the hour of 2 a. m. ciples; he must know the laws, the to send along the wire a message to agencies created by those laws, what bring confusion in the camp of the those agents are doing, and the enemy, a bit of intrigue, any thing to the right of the chapel, facing the altar methods which they employ. His beat the other fellow, and it should beknowledge, at the best, is but a smat-come mixed with the exercises of our tering to him, at all, the Government Sunday-school boys, who are just at Those participating in these prelimiis little else than a conjecture, a fancy that moment repeating the golden text nary mortuary services either knelt other." We await with much curiosity the outcome of the Sunday-school under very clear and correct notions about the stars.-Chattanooga (Tenn.) Let-

TALLEYRAND'S TRIBUTE.

Discovery of a French State Paper on the Death of Washington. Mr. Somerville Pinkney Tuck, United States Assistant Commissioner-General "enlightenment" as to put comparison Nathan Appleton, the object of which is to raise a fund for the erection of a The American who glories in the statue of Washington in some place in majesty of the Republic, and who val- the city of Paris. The following is a ues his own freedom, can not afford to translation of the paper in question, 183 of volume 51 of the manuscript series known as "Etats-Unis, 1779-1800. (Years seven and eight of the French

> Report of Talleyrand, Minister of Foreign Affairs, on the occasion of the death of George

Washington: A nation which some day will be a great nation, and which to-day is the wisest and happiest on the face of the earth, weeps at the bier of a man whose courage and genius contributed the most to free it from bondage and elevate it to the rank of an independent and sovereign this great man, the memories aroused by these regrets, and a proper veneration for all that is held dear and sacred by mankind, impel us to give expression to our sent ments by taking part in an event which deprives the world of one of its brightest ornaments, and removes to the realm of history one of the noblest lives that ever honored the human race. The name of Washington is inseparably linked with a memorable epoch; he adorned wholly beyond the grasp of the young. this epoch by his talents and the nobility of his character, and with virtues that even envy of every man, woman and child among dared not assault. History offers few exam- the friends and relatives of the deples of such renown. Great from the outset of matter reserved for older minds. You his career, patriotic before his country had becan not be too much impressed by a come a nation, brilliant and universal despite the passions and political resentments that would gladly have checked his career, his fame is to-day imperishable, fortune having consecrated his claim to greatness, while the prosperity of a people destined for grand achievements is the best evidence of fame ever to in crease. His own country now honors his memory with funeral ceremonies, having lost a citizen whose public actions and unassuming grandeur in private life were a living example of courage, wisdom and unselfishness, and Francewhich from the dawn of the American revolution hailed with hope a nation hitherto un-known that was discarding the vices of Europe, which foresaw all the glory that this Nation would bestow on humanity, and the en lightenment of governments that would ensue from the novel character of the social institu-Washington and America were models of the world at large-France, I repeat, should depart from established usages and do honor to one whose fame is beyond comparison with that of

The man who amid the decadence of modern ages first dared believe that he could inspire degenerate nations with courage to rise to the level of republican virtues, lived for all nations and for all centuries, and this nation, which trious man a foreboding of his destiny, and therein recognized a future right to be realized class him as a fellow-citizen. I therefore submit to the first consul the following decree: Bonaparte, first Consul of the Republic. de-rees as follows: Article I. A statue is to be erected to General Washington. Article II. This statue is to be placed in one of the squares of Paris, to be chosen by the Minister of the Interior, and it shall be his duty to execute the present decree. There is no evidence that any action was ever taken on this proposed decree of Napoleon, and it is probable that the matter was entirely forgotten in the press of affairs of that exciting time. A copy of the original of this prophetic state paper has been lately procured by Mr. Tuck for the Department of State. - Washington Dispatch.

FLUTES FOR LADIES. Delicate Vibrations of the Strings Super seded by Distended Cheeks. Queer things are happening now-adays. Verily, this is the age of novelty! It is true music is always in fashion, but certain musical instruments come into fashion for a time and are then superseded by others when they are no longer a novelty. The young women of the present generation have toughened their pretty fingers on the rollicking banjo, and tinkled on the sentimental guitar; they have flirted with the tortoiseshell plectrum of their mandolins, coquetted with the zither, and flourished the violin bow with the grace that only Venus possesses, very few of them venturing to wrestle with the harp. But of all the stringed instrumore than any other the beauty of the arm and figure of a woman. Strings are going out. Their delicate vibrations and quiverings must give place to new sounds; they have a rival. It is the flute! I could not believe it when I first heard it, but it is a fact. The flute is to be the popular of markets, stocks and trusts than of musical instrument among ladies, and devotion, sent clicking along the wires: they will now be bruising their "And he straightway charged,"—cab- rosy lips upon inanimate pieces bage, fifteen cents; potatoes, Irish, of wood and metal in order to bring with sent him away"-with market of men. Already one young lady is so closing dull on wheat. "We have al- proficient that she is in great demand ways had a feeling of pity for these for all amateur musical performances: night long must do nothing but listen which she is invited she is requested during each ghostly hour to the mo- to bring her flute. I wonder if it is a notonous tick, tick of the instruments, pretty sight to see a pretty woman play upon a wind instrument? Was it soft tinges on the hard tragedy of their not Alcibiades which laughed the flute every-night life. But down here in out of fashion by ridiculing the anthe sleepy Southland these electric pearance of the performer, whose disknights have solved the difficulty for tended cheeks were rapidly becoming themselves. What an era of religious red and uncomfortable looking? activity we may expect when this be- Ladies, will it be the cornet next?comes universal, and instead of begin- N. Y. Star.

GREEK CHURCH RITES.

The Elaborate Ceremonies of the Russian Burial Service.

I have just been a witness of the Russian burial service, in the church, over the remains of a Russian native, the widow of an American trader who mass began in the women's chapel, in the morning, in the presence of about forty Russians and natives, mostly women. The responses of the mass were made by a choir, composed of two venerable old men, standing at screen, and a group of children, some Russian and others Sitkan Indians. by wire: "In honor preferring one an- on the matting or prostrated themselves with their faces resting on the floor. The mass was intoned by the priest in Slavonic, and the responses by the choir in the same tongue, while the worshippers silently and constantly showed their participation by almost continuously crossing themselves on the breast and face with the right hand, frequently using the left in connection with the right for that pur-

The intonation of the mass seemed more like a wail or a refrain than any thing else to which I can liken it. The upon the Government simply as a great | French spoliation claims, discovered at | Indian women were clad with brightlycolored shawls and gaudy blankets, and wore black scarfs over their heads instead of hats, hoods, or bonnets. This service lasted an hour, when the priest made an address of about ten ing is what you have accomplished minutes in Russian respecting the deceased, after which the sacred wafer chison Globe. in the sacrament was given those who advanced to the altar for that purpose. Children far younger than those admitted to the confirmation in other ness of the people may be measured churches were allowed to receive the by the flowers they cultivate." sacramental water.

The ceremony over, the choristers passed to the body of the church and ranged themselves about the head of the open coffin, while the priest, after | truth will find a place to break through. exchanging his vestment for one of deep black, embroidered with broad bands of silver lace, began a requiem mass behind the altar screen, and the responses were made in the body of the church. At the same time a deacon placed three s'ender wax tapers, lighted, around the head of the deceased, a larger taper having been left burning at the foot of the coffin ever since it had been brought into the church. The men were ranged on the right side of the coffin and the women on the left, and the deacon then placed a similar wax taper or candle in the right hand ceased and the communicants of the church.

The sky outside was clouded and lowering, and the deepest possible gloom pervaded the church, which, with the scores of burning tapers, made a peculiar picture. Especially was this so when the tapers were flourished from side to side in making the frequent signs of the cross during this part of the mass. The priest approached the coffin from behind the screen and passed around it a score of times, waiving the smoking censer and intoning the mass amid the responses of the choir.

This mass lasted for three quarters of an hour, and then the four orphan children of the deceased approached and first kissed a small painted image of Jesus reclining on the breast of the dead mother and then her brow. Each the deceased repeated this ceremony, at the close of which a pall was placed on the coffin and its lid taken in charge passed out with the uncovered coffin, the priest with uncovered head and in his vestments preceding the body to the grave, where the mass was ended, the lid replaced, and the coffin lowered to the grave. A considerable portion of the revenue of the church comes on such occasions in payment for the necessary candles for that part of the ceremony, according to the wealth and circumstances of the deceased person. -Sitka Cor. N. Y. Times.

A HAPPY MARRIAGE.

The Only Way in Which an Ideal Union

Two people may be of suitable age, temper, tastes and inclinations, but if they have not minds sufficiently origcomfortable their life together may be, their union can not be ideally happy. Only the man or woman who can offer novelty, continual freshness, can hope to keep alive an affection of quick fervor. The individuality of the race is loyally binding. People fortunately do not demand a great deal in this line. A very little freshness, a new thought | istence to creatures whose simplest now and then, a slight growth, a small acts are done in such a way as to attainment in untried fields, suffices; but this is imperative to vitality of interest. Unless a husband and wife fall in love with each other anew every day, their marriage has failed of its ideal possibilities.

And from what has been said it is easy to perceive what nonsense is the talk about affinities which used to be called into account for the failure of a marriage. While some people are fitted to live together and others are not, the paucity of thought, of imagination, of originality, of ordinary people makes it impossible for them to realize the highest conditions of love or of friendship; and since the fault is inherently their own no affinity could remedy the effect.

The moral, if one wishes to draw moral, is sufficiently obvious. The only way in which an ideal marriage becomes possible is by the cultivation of the imagination and the creative powers. This may not secure the desired blessing, but without it an ideal marriage is impossible.—Boston Cour

-Conscience lays on heavy tasks, but gives high pay.

PITH AND POINT.

-Marriage would be more frequently a success if fewer men and women were failures.

-A man never knows what he can do until he tries; and then, afterward, he is often very sorry that he found

-He is happy whose circumstances suit his temper; but he is more excelent who can suit his temper to any circumstances.

-One of the mistakes in the conduct of human life is to suppose that other men's opinions will make us happy.

-To an honest mind the best perquisites of a place are the advantages it gives a man of doing good-Addi--As charity requires forgetfulness of evil deeds, so patience requires forgetfulness of evil accidents .-Bishop Hall.

-Youth is the time of hope. When a man gets a little older he stops hoping and begins reaching out for whatever he can get. -Somerville Journal. -Trying to reform a man by reforming his surroundings, is like tying seckle pears or rambo apples to the rough twigs of a crab-tree.-Interior. -Every man is the architect of his own fortune. And it's lucky for most of us that there's no building inspector around.-Puck. -Don't tell what you could have done under favorable circumstances. What the world is interested in hearunder unfavorable circumstances.-At-

-It is a saying worthy of an acceptation that "in all parts of the world the refinement, innocence and happi-

-The only way to shine, even in this false world, is to be modest and unassuming. Falsehood may be a thick crust, but in the course of time

-Our lives are like some complicated machine, working on one side of a wall, and delivering the finished fabric on the other. We can not cross the barrier and see the end. The work is in our hands-the completion is not. -Pain and pleasure are so intimately interwoven in our human life that either alone seems to be incomplete. It is for us to accept them both; not for their own sakes, but for something higher than either, that we have at heart, and that will make all sacrifice easy and all burdens light .- N. Y. Ledger.

-When we look back upon our lives. especially if we begin to feel that they are pretty far spent, how we amuse ourselves with thoughts of what we might have made out of them other than they are. But it is an amusement that may as well be sparingly indulged in. Our better employment is to make as much as possible of what is left us. - United Presbyterian.

CONCERNING CATS.

A Journalist's Friday Afternoon Composition on Tabby. The cat has ever been regarded as a mysterious creature, and has of a consequence been shunned, as amateur swimmers avoid deep holes, by the youth of our land in their literary efforts. The dog and the horse are notoriously what are termed "old standbys" as subjects for compositions, but it is noteworthy that the cat, though even more familiar to all than either communicant and immediate friend of of the aforementioned animals, is neglected in all Friday afternoon literature. The kitten is much beloved by reason of its frivolous and gay nature... by two pall-bearers, who bore it out of Its propensity to amuse itself with any the church while six other pall-bearers light object or, in detault of other movables, its own fleeting tail endears it to all young persons, but there is an unnatural gravity and air of absorption in deep philosophical matters about the mature cat which is forbidding, not to say awe-inspiring. It may be that its uncanny nature has caused it to be associated with witches. Certainly its habit of being out at all hours of the night gives color to the suspicion that it is a baleful beast. A cat acts as if it knew that the disclosure of its secrets would result in death to all its kind at the hands of an enraged humanity. Now there is something frank and openhearted about a dog. He may bite an enemy, but a cat will scratch its dearest friend. A dog can not keep a seinal or well stored to offer to each other | cret. A cat never tells one. The norfresh attractions they quickly find mal dog is undoubtedly a sane creatthemselves at the melancholy stage of ure, and this is proved by the fact conning twice-told tales, and however | that now and then one goes mad. They have to go mad, don't you see? Now, reasoning on that basis, a cat must be normally insane, if a paradox be perto wife or husband or friend continual mitted. A dog growls when he is angry and wags his tail when he is pleased. A cat, on the contrary, growls when she is pleased and wags far too highly developed for us to fol- her tail in anger. Others have noted low the fashion of our ancestors of this fact before, but the great mass of taking friendship as a contract almost | mankind have ignored it, absorbed in the strife for existence. It behooves us to inquire if it be safe to allow ex-

> cago Mail. Wonders of the Deep Sea.

arouse suspicion of their sanity .- Chi-

The sea occupies three-fifths of the earth's surface. A mile down the water has a pressure of a ton to the square inch. It has been proven that at the depth of 3,500 feet the waves are not felt. At some places the force of the sea dashing against the rocks on the shore is said to be seventeen tons to the square yard. The temperature is the same, varying only a trifle from the ice of the pole to the burning sun of the equator. The water is colder at the bottom than at the surface. In the many bays on the coast of Norway the water

If a box six feet deep were filled with sea water, and the water allowed to evaporate in the sun, there would be two inches of salt left at the bottom. Taking the average depth of the ocean to be three miles, there would be a layer of pure salt 230 feet thick on the Atlantic.-Indianapolis Journal